- Other personal injury, wrongful death, and products liability cases
- Professional licensure matters
- Risk management
- Credentialing
- Litigation involving regulatory issues

Effective advocacy requires attorneys to know their client's business or profession in order to understand and effectively communicate their position. Knowing the facts and appreciating the context of an incident, and helping layperson jurors or fact finders reach the same understanding, is essential. In no field is this more true than in healthcare litigation, where knowledge of medicine, physiology, clinical practice, and the client's role is indispensable.

Our team includes attorneys and paralegals who have worked with healthcare professionals and their staffs for many years, and are familiar not only with the law applicable to their clients' practices, but also the anatomy, physiology, biology, literature and clinical settings pertinent to medical litigation.
